Reading

Thomas was furious. His friend Steve had come over for a visit yesterday. That was fun and all, because they played videos games and watched TV together, but Steve hadn't mentioned that he was sick before he'd arrived. He hadn't said a single word about it. Steve looked a bit pale and had the sniffles when he arrived, but he'd insisted it was just allergies. He popped a couple allergy pills and went on playing his game, occasionally wiping his snot on a napkin or even on his pants. It was pretty gross. Later on, he was looking worse and drinking a lot of water. He eventually went home a bit earlier than he usually would have. Thomas didn't think much of it until two days later, when his nose started to run. Man, what was with the headache, too? He wasn't feeling well at all. A few hours later, and he was sure he had a good fever. Sure enough, the thermometer said 101 degrees. Thomas groaned and called his friend.

"You got me sick!" He yelled at Steve through the phone.

"What? I'm fine. I was sick a few days ago, though." Steve replied casually.

"You came to my house a few days ago."

"Oh, yeah. Sorry, dude."
